New sites put forward to help Hertsmere grow

Around 20 new potential sites for housing and employment in Hertsmere have emerged following on from the latest round of consultation on how the borough should develop.

The new sites, which includes land currently used by Radlett Golf Club, to the west of Borehamwood; land south of Rectory Farm, Shenley, and land south of Greyhound Lane in South Mimms, have been added to a long list of locations around Hertsmere put forward to Hertsmere Borough Council through its Call for Sites process and previous consultations. Most of the new sites are being promoted as areas which could be used for homes, while others are being promoted for business and employment premises. Comments are welcome on the new sites by emailing local.plan@hertsmere.gov.uk.

Currently, planning officers and councillors are deciding which sites will form part of the borough's draft Local Plan, due to be published in spring next year. Not all the potential sites will be included in the plan. The next formal consultation will be conducted next year once the draft plan is published.

An overview of the responses from site promoters, statutory bodies and local interest groups to the latest consultation has been published and is available to view here. It includes a map of all the new sites which have been promoted.

This now concludes the current Call for Sites process. Any further submissions will need to be made during the next consultation period in spring 2020.
